At times, partisan viewpoints and patrician politics can interfere with the process of elected officials of working collaboratively to find solutions to common problems. The ability to work in collaboration leads to fresh ideas, new ways of thinking and fosters robust public debate.

Please join us as Nancy Jacobson, founder and CEO of No Labels, a nonpartisan organization, discusses strategies for bringing goal-focused problem solving to government. Nancy will be the featured speaker at the City Club on March 18.

GUEST SPEAKER:

Nancy Jacobson is the founder and CEO of No Labels, a nonpartisan organization committed to getting our national political leaders to stop fighting and start fixing.

She has an extensive background as a political entrepreneur, pioneering new and innovative ways to tackle entrenched political challenges. In addition to founding No Labels, Nancy helped create Third Way—a think tank that has been recognized for its original, influential and rigorous policy work. She was also involved in the creation of the Women's Leadership Forum at the Democratic National Committee.

Nancy's leadership in these organizations' creation and management has contributed significantly to the original thinking and modern breakthrough tactics that put each group on the political map—not just inside the beltway, but nationally.

Nancy has been featured in numerous national publications such as Elle, Marie Claire, and Washingtonian and in 2008 was ranked as one of the 50 most powerful people in DC by GQ.

Please join us for this wonderful opportunity to bring to the local level strategies to compromise in our work in municipal government.
